Providing Opportunities for Tomorrow's Christian Leaders.

October 10, 2009

Dear Friends,

Scripture teaches us that the use of our treasure is a clear indication where our heart is (Luke 12:34). Many things can represent our treasure – our time, our focus, our talents, or our money (all of which is provided by and belongs to God). Now having two children who have graduated from Wake Christian Academy, I can better appreciate where my folks' "heart" was as they did what it took to make sure my two brothers and I attended WCA - a school with a focus on Christ.

As you share your treasure with FPEF through prayer support, volunteering, or financial gifts, you are showing that your heart is knitted together with the Foundation as we focus on the financial needs of families who have made Christian education a priority in their homes. Some families may not have the resources to cover the tuition fully for their child(ren). This need can be permanent or temporary, but either way it is a very serious situation for the family involved.

Let me assure you that students receiving financial aid at WCA are approved through an outside third party that examines their situation and then recommends to the school a support level. Families in need must demonstrate their desire to have their child in a Christian learning and growing environment by committing to their first year at WCA at full tuition and completing a very involved approval process before aid is available.

The help you provide to this cause does not go unnoticed – here on Earth or in Eternity. Thank you!

In Christ,

Trent Pierce

PS - One way you might want to consider giving to the Franklin Pierce Educational Foundation is through the donation of an appreciated asset such as stock or land. Did you know you can donate items that would create a potential tax liability for you if you sold them? As a non-profit 501(c) organization, FPEF can sell donated property with no tax owed. You can possibly deduct the entire value of the item when it is donated. You can also name FPEF in your will or as a beneficiary of a life insurance policy, retirement account, or trust.
